Professional Conduct

Employees are expected to act with integrity, respect, accountability, and good judgment in all company-related activities. This includes work performed in offices, remote environments, client sites, business travel, and digital collaboration spaces.

Managers are expected to model company values, address conduct concerns promptly, and escalate sensitive matters to People Operations or Legal.

Anti-Harassment and Respectful Workplace

Harassment, discrimination, bullying, intimidation, retaliation, and abusive conduct are prohibited. Protected characteristics include those defined by applicable law and company equal opportunity standards.

Employees may report concerns to their manager, People Operations, Legal, or the confidential ethics channel. Reports are reviewed promptly and handled with appropriate confidentiality.

Conflicts of Interest

Employees must avoid personal, financial, or outside business interests that could interfere with company responsibilities. Potential conflicts must be disclosed before decisions are made or commitments are accepted.

Examples include supervising a family member, accepting gifts from vendors, holding outside employment with a competitor, or influencing procurement involving a personal relationship.

Gifts, Entertainment, and Vendor Interactions

Employees may not request gifts, cash, or personal favors from suppliers, customers, or candidates. Modest business meals or promotional items may be accepted when they are infrequent, transparent, and not intended to influence a decision.

Gifts valued above 75 USD, travel benefits, event tickets, or hospitality involving government officials require Legal review before acceptance.

Use of Company Assets

Company assets must be used responsibly and primarily for business purposes. Assets include devices, networks, credentials, software licenses, data, facilities, brand materials, and intellectual property.

Employees must not bypass security controls, share accounts, install unapproved software, or use company systems for unlawful, offensive, or high-risk personal activities.

Disciplinary Process

Policy violations may result in coaching, written warnings, access restriction, reimbursement denial, termination, or legal action depending on severity and local law.

The company considers intent, impact, prior history, cooperation, and remediation when determining outcomes.
